

"Anomalous diffusion and its biophysical applications."

Diffusion of particles in cells can usually not be described in terms of conventional Brownian motion and exhibits what is called "anomalous behavior".

We give a short overview over existing models of anomalous diffusion and discuss their applications to different biophysical systems. Particular emphasis will be given to systems that can be described with time-dependent diffusion coefficients.

Dr Anna BODROVA

Université Humboldt de Berlin

Faculté de Mathématiques et sciences naturelles

Institut de Physique

Berlin, Allemagne

Invitée par Gerald Kneller

Vendredi 24 juin 2016 à 11h

Salle de conférence du CBM